Today's Objectives

- Dispel some myths
- Learn how we are more similar than different
- Hear directly from the 4 generations about how they prefer to give and receive feedback

The generations defined

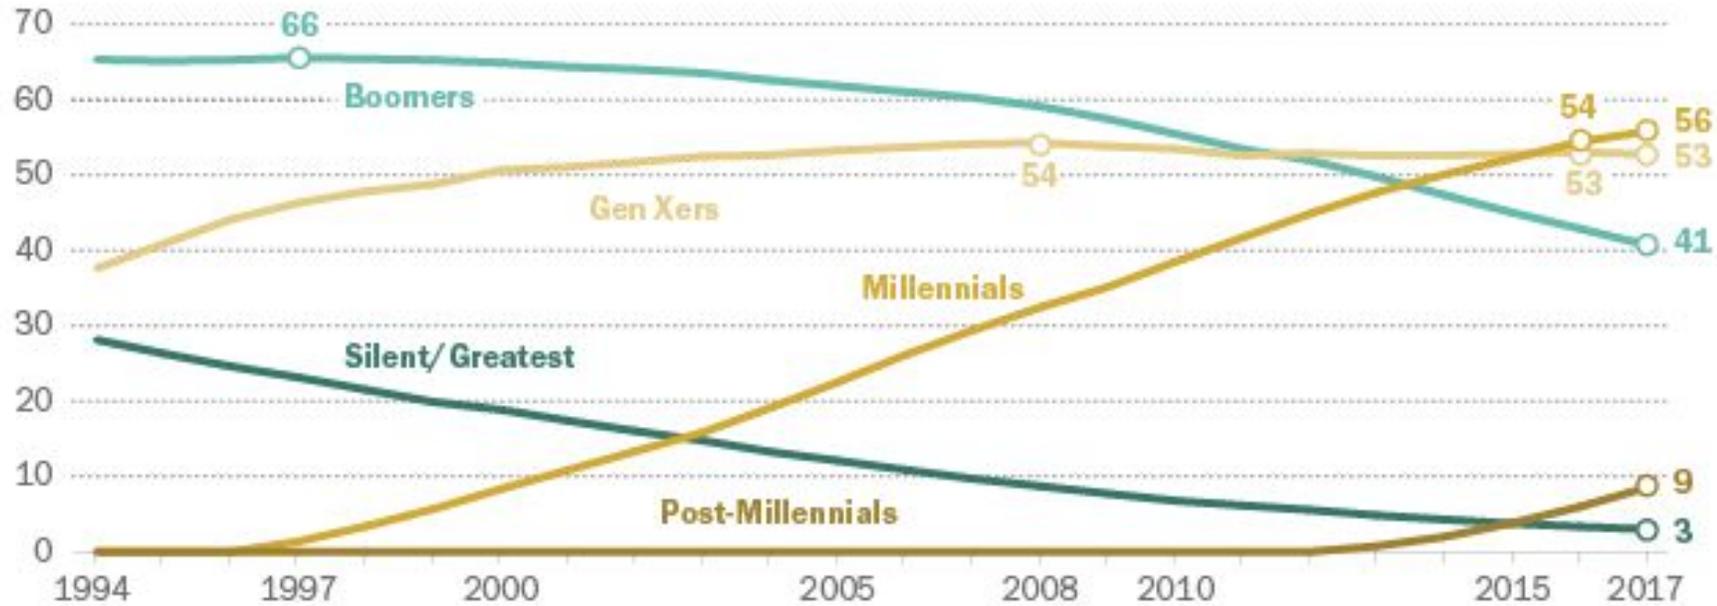

*No chronological endpoint has been set for this group. For this analysis, Generation Z is defined as those ages 7 to 22 in 2019.

Labels & stereotypes about Gen Z (Under 27)?

Myth: Gen Z is lazy and don't care about work.

49%

of Gen Z view their work as more important than exercise, music, or hobbies, second only to family and friends.

Deloitte's 2023 Gen Z and Millennial Survey

Generation Z entered the workplace when there wasn't even one to go to.

Those years, marked by a global health crisis and social unrest, helped shape their views about life as well as work.

Many of them were home as their parents' workplaces closed, so they got a ground-floor view of what jobs really looked like, and they didn't like what they saw: a work-life balance that left little time for life, management that seemed to not care about the mental health of their employees, and an organizational structure that didn't give workers much of a voice.

Now, they have an opportunity to shape the workplace as they begin to enter the ranks of management themselves.

Labels & stereotypes about Millennials (28-43)

Myth: Millennials Have No Work Ethic

- It isn't that Millennials don't want to work. Rather, they don't believe in the value of work for its own sake.
- They want to work efficiently to balance work time and play time.
- For them, long work hours do not equal hard work.
- They're achievement-oriented.
- In your business, this translates to higher production in a shorter time period, allowing for more leisure time.

Labels & stereotypes about Gen X (44-59)?

Myth: Your work hours reflect how hard you work.

- In the traditional workplace of desk-based 9 to well-past-5 employees, visibility was a key metric to see how productive an employee was.
- The unspoken assumption was if you were in the office you were working hard, if at home, you had your feet up watching Netflix.
- However, post Covid-19, that has gone out the door, at least for younger generations.

“There’s an argument to be had with that presenteeism of ‘I’ve sat at my desk for 10 hours today’ compared to someone who says they are only going to work when they know they are the most productive.”

Myth: You have to manage the generations differently

Across age groups, employees tend to leave—and start new jobs—for similar reasons

“With few exceptions, we don’t see big differences in our research across the generations.”

Josh Millet, Criteria

In 2017, 24% of respondents to a Pew survey said their job or occupation was very important to their identity.

In 2021, just 17% did.

Best Practices

YOUR Preferred Channels Are Not Always The Right Channels For YOUR AUDIENCE

Consider how your message needs to be received before sending.

20%

Of Baby boomers still use their office landline

66%

Of workers say they want a heads-up via text message before getting a call from a colleague of employees say they get anxiety when they receive an unexpected call or voicemail from work.

“Effective communication is not a one-size-fits-all solution in today’s modern, digital workplace”

“You have to have an understanding of the demographic preferences, you have to consider what type of information you’re communicating, the urgency of the message, the context of the message; all of these are key factors when deciding on the mode of communication.”

Baby Boomers

1. Appreciate formal and structured feedback, such as annual performance reviews.
2. Value recognition and respect for their achievements and seniority.
3. May not be comfortable with receiving feedback from younger generations or using technology for feedback.

Gen X

1. Prefer direct and honest feedback, such as face-to-face conversations.
2. Value autonomy and independence in their work.
3. May not appreciate feedback that is too frequent or too vague.
4. May also be skeptical of feedback that is not backed by facts or evidence.

Millennials

1. Prefer frequent and constructive feedback, such as real-time feedback or coaching.
2. Value Learning and Development opportunities in their work.
3. May not respond well to feedback that is too harsh or too generic.
4. May also expect feedback to be personalized and tailored to their goals and interests.

Gen Z

1. Prefer instant and interactive feedback, such as feedback via digital platforms or gamification.
2. Value creativity and innovation in their work.
3. May not tolerate feedback that is too slow or too boring.
4. May also seek feedback from multiple sources and perspectives.

Mutual Objectives

Before you say anything to anyone, pause and ask yourself:

1. What do I want for myself?
2. What do I want for the other person?
3. What do I want for the relationship?

Reaction to Lack of Clarity

Likely to push back and resist decisions they don't understand, showing overconfidence.

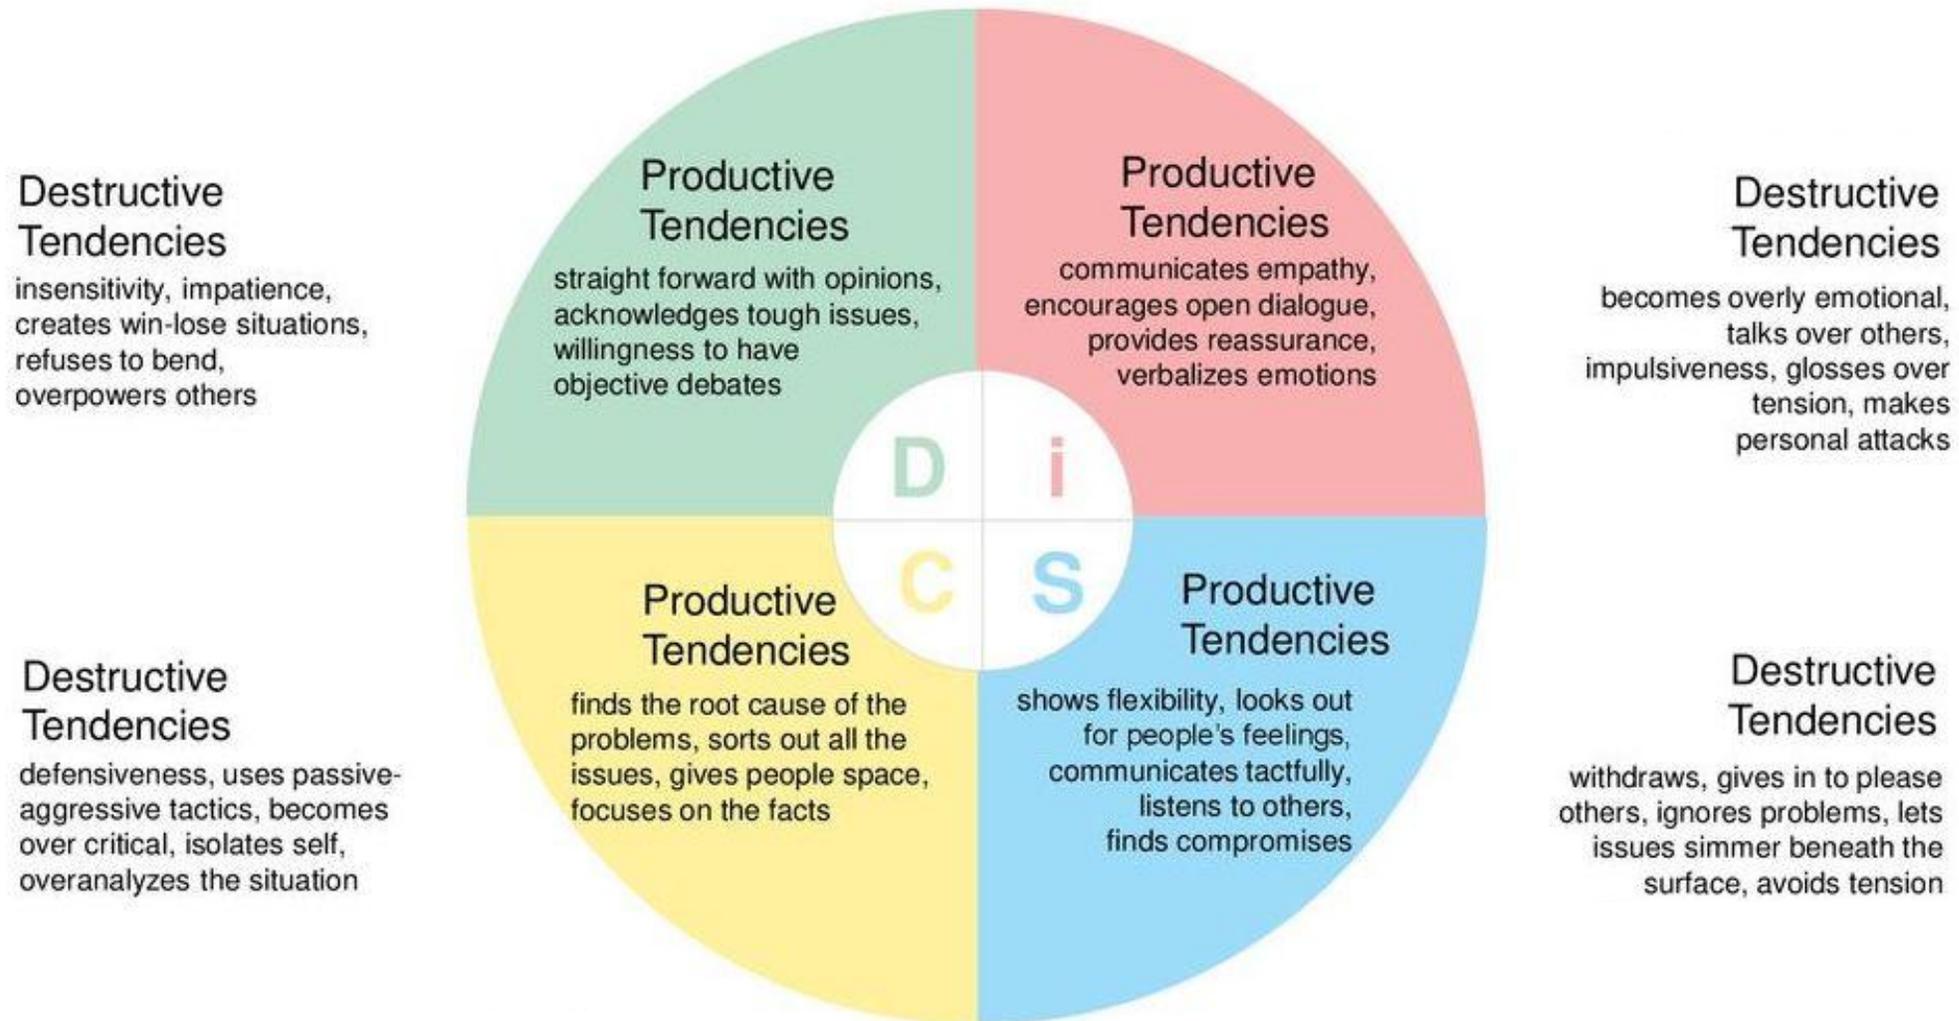

Tend to be solitary and may simply focus on on their own objectives, deepening the sense of misalignment

Prone to impulsiveness and may be disorganized at times, so without clear goals they may simply fail or not follow through.

May second-guess themselves and their work, which may impede their productivity.
